One of the ways in which a practice or benefit can constitute an implied term of a contract of employment. A practice or benefit will become an implied term of the employment contract if it is regularly adopted and is customary in a particular trade or locality or at a particular workplace. For the custom or practice to amount to an implied term of the employment contract, it must be "reasonable, certain and notorious" ( Bond and another v CAV Ltd [1983] IRLR 360) and followed "because there ...
