Someone answered: Visible pulsations in the eye that coincide with your heartbeat could signify a serious condition. Most commonly, such pulsations are due to abnormalities of the bony orbits surrounding your eyes, anomalies of the blood vessels supplying the eyes, or possibly even a tumor behind the eye.

I recently went to my ophthalmologist about being able to see my pulse or heart beat in my eyes after physical activity. I don't see it or notice it when I am sitting still, however when I run on the treadmill or run up the steps to answer the phone or something, I can see my heart beat or pulse in my eyes. I have done so much research online and haven't found any info, however I do find that there are message boards with many people who have the same symptom as I.
