This is a beautiful collection of prayers and theology from Syrian monastic writers of the patristic period, including such luminaries as Evagrius and Isaac of Nineveh. These writings are similar to other collections from Greek and Russian writers as found in the Philokalia, for example, but have their own special quality, a particular lyricism and eschatological vision that warms the heart and cleanses the mind.

For example, The Lord's prayer begins with "Our Father," a translation of the word, "abba.". But the actual Aramaic transliteration is "Abwoon" which is a blending of "abba (father)" and "woon" (womb), Jesus's recognition of the masculine and feminine source of creation. I experienced a physical sensation of calming love from the Aramaic words, later explained by Dr. Douglas-Klotz in a 2012 youtube interview when he talked about the ancient practice of Jesus's day.

Yet we can see from the Church Fathers that it existed from the earliest centuries of the Christian era. So it follows that the closest text we will find to the exact words of Jesus is the Peshitta text of the Lord's prayer. In fact, I suspect that the Peshitta preserves the exact Aramaic words of Jesus's prayer.
